An Analytical Catalogue of Kuwait Maps up to 1960

* Ph.D. in Geography, Exeter University, 1991. Teaches «History of Cartography», Department of Geography, Faculty of Arts, Kuwait University.
Abstract

The Catalogue includes maps of Kuwait territory dating from the 12th century A.D. to 1960 (in 1961 Kuwait achieved full independence) and was compiled by searching archives in Kuwait itself and also those in Britain, Abu Dhabi, Bahrain, Egypt, Turkey and Iraq.

Each map is fully described.

The information in the Catalogue is organised in the following manner:

1. Archive reference
2. Map title
3. Map content
4. Map scale
5. Map date
6. Map surveyor
7. Additional information
1. Introduction and Explanation of the Catalogue

The objective of this catalogue is to compile and classify the official maps of Kuwait which are extant in various departmental archives in Kuwait itself and in archives abroad. Such an endeavour has never been attempted before. Secondly, through this compilation, investigation and classification, much information, both geographical and political, on Kuwait, has been obtained. This is because these are historical and geographical maps which reveal the early beginnings of the State of Kuwait. The Catalogue also reveals the development of cartography in Kuwait. Hence the aim of the research has been to make a fully comprehensive catalogue, classifying and recording therein every map of Kuwait up to independence in 1961. The exception relates to the maps of the Municipality where only a representative sample of the extant property maps and plans has been catalogued.

In order to carry out this objective of a thorough compilation and classification of all extant maps of Kuwait, visits were made to numerous libraries and archival offices in Kuwait and abroad. No published catalogues have been used. Visits were made to each and every centre that has anything to offer by way of Kuwaiti maps and each and every country with historical ties with Kuwait cartographic enterprise. Thus in Kuwait itself, visits were paid to the Kuwait Municipality, Kuwait Oil Company (K.O.C.), the Amiri Diwan, Kuwait Military Archives and the Archives of the Dutch Embassy. Archives outside Kuwait include those of Abu Dhabi and Bahrain in the Arab Gulf region. However, nothing was found there of any substance to add to what was already found in Kuwait itself. Other journeys took the researcher to the Ministry of Defence, Taunton, the Hydrographic Department, the India Office Library and the Public Record Office, British Library, Map Room, in Great Britain. The sea has always been a chief source of sustenance and livelihood for Gulf Arabs, and care has been taken to highlight this in the research, hence the importance of the visit to Taunton. In Turkey, the Basbakanilc Arsivi, Istanbul University and the Islamic Research Centre were visited. The researcher was given freedom to study some maps in detail, but with some archives, there were problems with the lack of staff, and technical problems due to the sheer number of maps. In some cases, permission to study the maps in detail was not forthcoming, and there were restrictions concerning the information one was able to take. Extensive searches were conducted in the mensuration department of the Egyptian Archives and the Egyptian public libraries. After the Iran-Iraq hostilities ceased, a visit was paid to Basra University and Baghdad Archives in 1989. A number of interviews have also been conducted to provide further information.

2. The Archival Sources

Locating the maps included here has not been an easy task. In some cases, the researcher was not allowed to study the maps in detail, and was restricted as to the information permitted to be taken from the maps. At the Kuwaiti archives, every visit necessitated a special pass granted after the proper application had been submitted. In the event, such permits were granted without difficulty with the exception of the Kuwait Military archives. To obtain this permit, an interview involving detailed explanations proved necessary. However, once the objective of the visit was made clear, everything was provided to facilitate my research. Cartographic classification in the Kuwaiti Military Archives dates back only to 1970. Prior to that date, no classification whatsoever exists, neither in catalogues in the archives, nor under any numbers. The author had to resort to dates when requesting maps, which were not, anyway, as numerous as the author thought they might be. This is because until 1970, the army had been using the Kuwait Oil Company’s maps. Some of these maps had numbers, but these had nothing to do with modern classification.

The Municipality’s archives are better organised. Maps are stocked in an independent area where two employees, especially engaged for the work, have devised a cataloguing system of their own. They use numbers inserted on the maps related to survey date, and letters corresponding to the initials of the person who conducted the survey.
This is as far as the classification of the maps inside the archive goes, and the author has noted this in the catalogue. The catalogue of the Municipality is arranged in chronological order, i.e. Map No. 1 refers to a map executed in 1949. The month and day are also recorded. The difficulty affecting work in this archive is that if either of the two employees is absent, no-one else knows the classification system.

The Kuwait Oil Company (K.O.C.) maps are listed on index cards recording the reference number, area covered, and date. Thus the Company has a modern system of classification. The only difficulty is in having some of these maps photocopied. For security reasons, even investigating some of these maps was not permitted. The Geological Department, on the other hand, houses maps, but in no particular order. There is no archive as such, but maps are simply stocked in an area with numerous other papers dating up to 1970. Nevertheless, careful study has been made of these maps and these are included in the catalogue. Some of the K.O.C. maps have been copied and reproduced at a later date and the date given on the map is the date when it was copied and not the date when it was originally drawn. Also, some of the old maps have been thrown away or destroyed.

The maps of the Amiri Diwan, on the other hand, are without any fixed classification system as yet, but are in the process of being so treated. The numbers they bear are temporary as is their classification. Their area reference is the uniform general reference «Kuwait».

The maps at the British Ministry of Defence, Taunton, Hydrographic Department, are catalogued such that it is possible to retrieve all those maps and charts relating to Kuwait and the Gulf. The catalogue at Taunton also contains a brief description of the map, in addition to titles and dates. However, on some maps the number on the map is different from the supposedly corresponding number in the catalogue!

In the British Library, India Office and Public Record Office, the maps are similarly well-catalogued. The British Library contains documents dealing with the history of British activities in the Gulf and Middle East.

The Osmali Arsivi at Turkey (İstanbul) contains numerous reference books, documents and maps of countries having relations with the Ottoman Empire, or which contituted part of it. The Ottomans took great care of all such official papers, their own as well as those issued by other countries. The Basbakanlik archives are the most important repository of official document and maps. A researcher is impressed the minute he/she steps in by the great numbers of reference books, safes, archives, and huge catalogues.
However, one difficulty facing such a researcher is that of mastering the old Ottoman Turkish dialect used in most of these documents. Another is the hypersensitivity of the employees of these archives, especially when the researcher wishes to view maps as well as documents and reference books! Thus, to research this topic, inspect and verify the number of maps of Kuwait, various difficulties were encountered, especially since visits took place during the Iran-Iraq hostilities. At first, downright rejection and complete absence of co-operation was encountered, even though a written permit from the Turkish Embassy in Kuwait had been secured. Only after several attempts was it possible to convince the archivists that the sole objective behind this research work was to make a scientific study of Kuwaiti map history. It is likely that these archives contained more maps of Kuwait territory during the Ottoman period than the author was allowed to consult. Here, there is no classification of maps on Kuwait. Hence, the author had to search through such names as Gulf, Ottoman Iraq, Bubiyan, Qurayn, Failaka Islands, and so on. All maps referring to any of those, as well as any catalogues doing the same, have been reviewed in the research.

The Basbakanlic archives contain numerous catalogues. Thus references might overlap and repetition might occur. Furthermore, some maps are listed in separate catalogues. This is for political reasons. An example of this is the map of 1913 which is traceable by that date and entitled Kuwait. This is the only map carrying the name of Kuwait which it was possible to view. It has been particularly pleasing to be able to include in this work an example of the contents of one of the Basbakanlic catalogues for various years. The latest and most modern of these is the 1986 catalogue which includes Sira No. 7368- Tarihi 20 B1206.

The Basbakanlic Arsivi contains by far the largest number of maps from the fifteenth century onwards. The following files were consulted:

a) Inglitere - file (file of documents between Britain and Turkey).

b) Basbakanlic Arsivi Kilavasu.

c) Yildiz Tasnifi No. 37.

d) Ottoman Archives Basbakanlic Arsivi.

These archives were set up first in 1850 and run through to 1914. Maps are held in cylinder-form bags. All such bags are numbered using a slip which is listed in the catalogue. Some maps have no listing or clear label in the catalogue. An example of this is the map of Piri-Reis and the map of Kuwait 1913. Therefore, it is necessary to ask for the title of these maps when inspecting them.

the beautiful, highly decorative maps of the archives of Istanbul University and of Sultan Abdul-Hameed (1876-1909) are carefully preserved, by contrast with those in the Osmanli Arsivi. There is also a special index by means of which a map is requested; the index contains the title of the map and at the top a special number. An example of this is Asya Laitasi No 93795. The index cards also carry a brief description of the content of the map. Maps in the Islamic Centre are still unclassified and stored unclassified in drawers. The author has searched all of these and the following catalogue includes all of those which pertain to Kuwait.

The general difficulty about locating and studying maps in Turkish archives, is the great secrecy with which maps are surrounded as a result of hyper-sensitivity. The total absence of a unified reference work which includes them all (something which the present work has provided for maps of Kuwait) caused and still causes much confusion. The Turkish authorities are still considering adopting modern classification methods. such as a general guide to all the maps in the Turkish archives and other methods which include subject indexing of documents and reports relating to the maps. These maps are also extremely difficult to photocopy, if the researcher is lucky enough to be granted access in the first place!

The British Library also holds maps that are relevant to the catalogue. There is an extensive collection of maps, spanning several centuries; they have been well organized and catalogued with an index. However, the number of maps appearing in the catalogue is limited for the following reasons: some maps were unavailable for consultation as they were marked «Binding», for example «Arabia Coasts: Sheet 11, 1846, maps 147 & 19 (13). Other maps were under copyright with the War Office for 49050, 1916, Ap. 674, 12'w × 12, and some maps were marked «temporarily mislaid», for example 5 maps, catalogued 49270, 1837, Ap.676. Also there is a long delay factor when requesting maps to be photocopied and posted. Some maps are also held in the Kuwait Oil Company Archives, but have already been inspected there.

A variety of maps is illustrated in the body of the catalogue to show the contrast between the artistic nature of some and the practical nature of others. Where the condition of the map allows, the author has included the original. The maps are ordered according to scale. A map’s scale shows the ratio of measurement on the map to the measurement in the country concerned. This measurement is used to classify the maps in order beginning with the smallest scale and ending with the largest scale.

Maps that lacked such reference to scale are included in an appendix at the end of the catalogue in chronological order according to archive. Cards were prepared on all the maps containing such information as title, date, area covered, reference archive, scale, size of map, name of surveyor/cartographer, and any other information. The catalogue also includes maps from private libraries and private collectors.

Maps are an important source of information about a country whether political, sociological, economic, military or other. They reveal the interest of certain authorities in constructing the maps, for example, the location of oil and the demographic changes that resulted from this. Research in cartography also raises questions about the history of a country, for example, the question of the history of Kuwait and its past relations with foreign powers. The fact that most of the pre-oil Turkish and British maps covered the northern part of Kuwait, Bubayan Island, and Khore Abdullah, indicates that these areas were of particular interest to the Turkish and the British.

The effort and time spent in collecting, studying and preparing this catalogue have been amply rewarded by the fund of information it provides. Although there is a certain amount of research material not included for political reasons as stated above, the researcher has collated a substantial amount of data which was hitherto uncatalogued. The catalogue consists of 1,340 maps, both manuscript and printed, which is an invaluable compilation of varied material that provides an insight into political, social and economic factors as well as throws light upon the general history of Kuwait cartography.

3. Catalogue of Kuwait Maps to 1960

This catalogue has been organized by country in which early maps of Kuwait are preserved. Within each country the maps are listed by archive and the lists are arranged in descending order of scale. Each map is given a separate reference number for identification purposes, and was studied carefully, to obtain the information for the entry for the catalogue. The catalogue entries were constructed using only information available on the maps.

Turkish archives are described first, as these contain some of the earliest maps of the present-day territory of Kuwait. Then follow those of Egypt, Iraq, Britain, and then the archives within Kuwait itself where the main holdings date from the 1930’s to the 1950’s.

The information in the catalogue is organized in the following manner:
1 Archive reference
2 Map title
3 Map content
4 Map scale, size
5 Map date
6 Map surveyor
